The boaster was telling what a walker he is.

"Wby," he said, in his usual self-forgatful way, "Tm good for any distance. I could start right in at this very moment and walk clear around the earth."

"I'd like to see you try it," remarked the other man, "But take my advice. When you do try it, don't attempt to walk more than 20,000 miles, That's far enough. Think it over."

The boaster thought it over and finally realized that if he started round the earth and walked but 20,000 miles he would stop ghort at a point about 5,000 miles from the point where he started.

And he didn't like the other man very well after that.—Clevelan 1 Plain Dealer.
